INEBRIA Conference Overview

In 2015, INEBRIA will hold its annual conference in the United States for the second time.

While only a small number of U.S. investigators have attended past INEBRIA conferences in Europe and Latin America, the one previous INEBRIA conference held in the U.S. in Boston (2011) attracted more than 100 U.S. scientists and young investigators. INEBRIA 2015 offers a second opportunity to connect a large number of U.S. researchers with leading SBI researchers from around the world to discuss current critical issues related to alcohol SBI research. The theme of this year's meeting and preconference workshop, "Interprofessional Involvement in Screening and Brief Intervention," is designed to highlight the increasing role of nurses, social workers, and other healthcare professionals in SBI dissemination and increase their involvement in SBI research.

INEBRIA brings together the best thinking in the world about alcohol SBI research and gaps. This Atlanta conference will place a spotlight on the latest U.S. research findings while also gaining input and perspective from researchers who work in other cultural settings, facilitating both formal discussion and informal interaction. Young investigators with the potential to make major contributions to SBI research have time to meet and connect with leading researchers from around the world, identify novel research ideas and forge new collaborations. This year's Preconference Workshop on Interprofessional Involvement in SBI will gather SBI leaders from nursing, social work and other disciplines, explore their current role in SBI dissemination and seek to engage them more fully in SBI dissemination research.
